Digital Research Infrastructure for the Arts and Humanities

www.dariah.eu

DARIAH is a distributed Research Infrastructure that supports and enhances digitally-enabled research and teaching across the arts and humanities. It is a network bringing together people, expertise, information, knowledge, content, methods, tools and technologies from its member countries across Europe.

DARIAH has been recognised a European Research Infrastructure Consortium (ERIC) since 2014.

Looking for tools, services and data for your research?

Access to tools, data, knowledge and services that are optimised for arts and humanities researchers is a major challenge that DARIAH is taking up by developing an arts and humanities-friendly 'Marketplace'. This easy entry, designed as an app store, will focus on dynamic aspects of the research process and will be fully integrated to the European Open Science Cloud.

Looking to create or join transnational and transdisciplinary research groups?

From Artificial Intelligence and Music to Women Writers in History to GeoHumanities, DARIAH hosts a rich and wide array of diverse, open Working Groups. You are invited to explore and join any of these Groups or suggest forming a new one, based on your research interests. DARIAH enables and encourages communities to self-organise around emergent research themes and supports them by providing structure, communication channels, funding, networking and traveling opportunities.

Looking for or developing education and training resources?

Whether you are looking for your first DH training or developing your own DH courses, DARIAH can be a place to support, host or sustain you and your resources. Organising large conferences and dedicated hands-on workshops, developing web-based training programs, and collaborating with research institutions to produce and disseminate alternative knowledge forms are strategic priorities for DARIAH.

Looking to understand research policies and need a strong voice in European policy debates?

DARIAH is an advocate for researchers who create or use digital tools, methods and services in the arts and humanities, representing their concerns and interests at a European level where research policies are being discussed. If you need guidance to navigate policy and Open Science advocacy, DARIAH can support you at any career stage and level of expertise making sure that your contributions to Open Scholarship are more visible both inside and outside the arts and humanities research communities.
